

Introduction of IHECC

Directly supervised by the National Health Commission (NHC) of P. R. China, the International Health Exchange and Cooperation Center (IHECC) of NHC is an independent legal entity specialized in international exchange and cooperation in the health sector. It serves as a vital bridge and a gateway that connects China's health sector with counterparts from domestic and international non-governmental organizations, academic societies, foundations, enterprises and individuals, including those from Hong Kong SAR, Macau SAR, and Taiwan China.

In terms of its primary mandate, the IHECC conducts theoretical, policy, and strategic research in the field of international health exchange and cooperation. It provides strategic advice and technical consultations to inform legislation and policy development, government decision-making, and regulatory planning. Additionally, it offers technical support for the development of operational regulations and technical specifications in international health exchange and cooperation. The IHECC is also responsible for centrally administering China's foreign medical aid programs, implementing both international and domestic public health projects, facilitating the development and global collaboration of the healthcare industry, and advancing the medical rescue industry both domestically and internationally. Furthermore, it undertakes other mandates assigned by the National Health Commission of P.R. China.
